POLITICS AND YOUR PORTFOLIO

As America gets ready to elect our next president many of us wonder, how might a new administration's policies impact our day-to-day lives, our jobs, and the wealth we've worked hard to accumulate.

Presidential elections can be nerve-wracking for many of us. Because of the anxiety elections can cause, it's important to understand the relationship between politics and investments to approach the election process with confidence. Not surprisingly, a majority of us expect the election to result in increased volatility.

Attached is a piece I thought you might like to review regarding politics and your portfolio. Of the many factors that influence the stock market, the president is likely the least of them. Broader macroeconomic influences are what truly drive the markets.

Elections can be daunting. Don't let short term anxiety get in the way of your long term strategy. Making emotional decisions with regard to investing is never a good strategy. Every candidate employs a well thought out strategy to their campaign. Set your sights on the right goals and plans. If you would like to review your goals and plans or review the attached piece in detail please don't hesitate to contact me.
